MEB Approves Telemedicine Rule

The Medical Examining Board approved a revised version of a rule defining telemedicine Wednesday. It now heads to Gov. Scott Walker's office and then the state Legislature for approval.

The board has spent the last year drafting the rule, scrapping its original proposal after healthcare providers raised concerns. The final rule clarifies that a physician-patient relationship can be established through telemedicine and provides guidelines on equipment and technology as well as internet diagnosis and treatment.

"The two different versions of the telemedicine rule are pretty stark," said Mark Grapentine, senior vice president of government relations at the Wisconsin Medical Society. "One was super-detailed and lengthy, the other one is much more flexible and probably usable by the board itself."

DSPS Approves Rule on Opioid Prescribing CME Requirement

Doctors who prescribe controlled substances will have to complete training relating to the Medical Examining Board's opioid guidelines under a rule that went into effect Thursday. The Department of Safety and Professional Services signed off on the emergency rule last week. It requires doctors renewing their licenses to complete two hours of training on the guidelines out of their 30 hours of biennial mandatory continuing medical education.

Panel to Address Team-Based Care

Join Wisconsin Health News on December 6th in Madison for a panel presentation on scope of practice, team-based care and the future healthcare workforce.

The federal health reform law has ushered in a new wave of patients. Meanwhile, the state could face a shortfall of more than 4,000 doctors by 2035, and a 35 percent gap between the demand for nurses and the actual supply by 2040.

So, who is going to take care of all these new patients? How will primary care be delivered in the future? In what areas does it make sense to expand the scope of practice? Where does it not?

A panel of experts will tackle these questions and more during a Wisconsin Health News Panel Dec. 6 at the Madison Club. Panel participants will include:

- Dr. Dave Clemens, President-Elect, Wisconsin Dental Association
- Gina Dennik-Champion, Executive Director, Wisconsin Nurses Association
- Eric Elliot, President-Elect, Wisconsin Academy of Physician Assistants
- Linda Jorgenson, Former President, Wisconsin Dental Hygienists Association
- George Quinn, Executive Director, Wisconsin Council on Medical Education and Workforce
- Steve Rush, VP, Workforce and Clinical Practice, Wisconsin Hospital Association
- Dr. Ken Schellhase, President-Elect, Wisconsin Academy of Family Physicians
